CALENDAR
FW2014/2015

The Department of Humanities offers a broadly-based program of interdisciplinary study emphasizing the different ways in which human cultures and their multiple forms of expression have developed historically and continue to develop today. Humanities courses devote particular attention to the cultural practices of peoples in various times and places and the ways they have expressed cultural values and ideas of a philosophical, religious, moral, political and aesthetic nature. They foster a critical approach to reading and research that, in helping students learn to identify and question preconceived assumptions and values, allows them to engage and appreciate the interrelationship between diverse value systems and thereby to develop an analysis of the human and of human community. Courses offered in the Department of Humanities stress careful scrutiny of texts and cultural artifacts, critical thinking, reading, writing, seminar discussion, and close contact between teacher and student.

The Department of Humanities offers Honours BA, Honours iBA and BA degrees in Humanities which allow students to take advantage of a wide range of courses addressing important themes in the liberal arts. The Department also offers Honours BA, Honours iBA and BA degrees in Canadian Studies, Children's Studies, Classics, Classical and Hellenic Studies, Culture & Expression, East Asian Studies, European Studies, Individualized Studies, Jewish Studies, and Religious Studies. The department also participates in the Latin American and Caribbean Studies and Science and Technology Studies programs. Many Humanities courses reflect these areas of concentration, thereby ensuring that Humanities students have a wide range of course options to select from.

AWARDS

A complete list of awards, scholarships and bursaries is available:*

<http://sfs.yorku.ca/scholarships/index.htm>

The Humanities 25th Anniversary Book Prize: Awarded annually to the humanities major graduating with the highest cumulative grade point average of 7.50 or better for all years of study, calculated for all courses credited towards the major.

Carleton E. Perrin Book Prize for Excellence in Sciences: Awarded to the most outstanding science student taking a humanities course. Candidates considered for this award are expected to have demonstrated a minimum cumulative GPA of 7.50 and have a notable appreciation of the humanities.

The William Kilbourn Award: Awarded annually to a humanities major who has completed at least four humanities courses and is entering their final year of study with the highest grade point average. Must have a cumulative grade point average of at least 7.0 (B+) in humanities courses and a cumulative overall grade point average of 7.0 (B+). The Kilbourn Award in the Humanities commemorates the distinguished career of Professor William Kilbourn, historian, social activist, member of the Toronto City Council and Founding Chair of the Department of Humanities.

The Walter Gordon Prize in Canadian Studies: Awarded annually on the recommendation of the Course Director for AP/HUMA 1200 9.0 (Contexts of Canadian Culture), to the author of the best paper written in the course.

The Department of Humanities Retirees' Bursary: This award was established to assist an undergraduate student majoring in one of the following degree programs: Latin & Caribbean Studies; Science and Technology; Classical Studies; Religious Studies; East Asian Studies; Humanities or European Studies. The recipient must have completed between 30 and 60 credits with a cumulative GPA of 6.00 or higher and be registered in a minimum of 18 credits for the current academic year. The recipient must be a Canadian citizen, permanent resident or protected person, an Ontario resident and demonstrate financial need. For more information contact: Scholarships and Bursaries Unit, Student Financial Services, Bennett Centre for Student Services.

The Department of Humanities Award of Achievement: This award has been established to provide encouragement and financial support to a deserving York University third-year undergraduate student with a declared major in humanities. This award is renewable for one additional year assuming successful achievement of academic requirements. Recipients must be Canadian citizens/permanent residents or protected persons, residents of Ontario and demonstrate financial need. For more information contact: Scholarships and Bursaries Unit, Student Financial Services, Bennett Centre for Student Services.

ADVISING

When students first declare Humanities as a major or a minor they must contact the Humanities Program Coordinator, 416-736-5158, a professor who will help both select next year's courses and lay out a longer plan of study. Advising's goals: on the one hand: variety, range, flexibility, on the other: intellectual focus. Continuing students, both majors and minors, must meet annually with the coordinator to review progress and to fill out a degree program checklist of courses needed for the major/minor.

Note that students must satisfy not only the requirements of the Humanities Program but also those of the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies.

GRADING SYSTEM

Grading Scale

Except for courses taken under the "Ungraded Option" (see below), courses in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies are graded according to the following scale:

Grade	Point Value	Definition
A+	9	exceptional
A	8	excellent
B+	7	very good
B	6	good
C+	5	competent
C	4	fairly competent
D+	3	passing
D	2	barely passing
E	1	marginally failing
F	0	failing

Note: The Point Values in the middle column above are used only in calculating students' Grade Point Averages, both sessional and cumulative; they were not designed to be used to calculate marks in courses.

Percentage Equivalents to Letter Grades:

The Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies does not have an official table of "percentage equivalents" for its final letter grades. See the section on grades in courses, for information on conversion from percentages to letter grades within courses.

Grades In Courses Marking Scheme:

a. Announcement in Class: The means of determining the final grade in a course must be announced in writing in each course within the first two weeks of classes. Such information must include the kinds of assignments, essays, examinations, and other components which make up the grade; their relative weights; and any other procedures which enter into the determination of the final grade.

- b. Subsequent Changes: In exceptional circumstances, a previously announced marking scheme for a course may be changed, but only with the consent of all students; the new marking scheme must also be distributed in written form.
- c. "Feedback" During Course: Instructors are obligated to provide a mechanism by which students can be apprised of their progress in a course; in particular, students must be able to make an informed decision on whether to withdraw from a course. Graded feedback to be received by students prior to the final withdrawal date from a course without receiving a grade at least 15% of the final grade for Fall, Winter or Summer Term, and 30% for 'full year' courses offered in the Fall/Winter Term.
- d. In courses where percentages are used as a means of reporting grades on individual pieces of work, the following conversion table is to be used in converting percentage grades to letter grades, unless alternative provisions for scaling and/or conversion are announced to students in writing within the first two weeks of classes.

From Percentage To Letter Grade

90-100	A+
80-89	A
75-79	B+
70-74	B
65-69	C+
60-64	C
55-59	D+
50-54	D
40-49	E
0-39	F

Release of Final Grades:

Release Dates:

- (1) Fall/Winter Session: In the Fall/Winter Session, grades are normally released in January for Fall Term half courses, and in June for full courses and Winter Term half courses.
- (2) Summer Session: Grades for courses taken in the Summer Session are normally released in September.

REQUESTS FOR REAPPRAISAL OF FINAL GRADES

Students may, with sufficient grounds, request that a final grade in a course be reappraised. Further information may be obtained from the Department offering the course. Students applying to have a grade reappraised in a Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies course should note the following:

- a. Deadline: Requests for reappraisal must be filed with the unit offering the course within 21 calendar days of the release of the final grade in the course. February 15 for fall term grades; June 15 for Y term and winter term; September 30 for summer session grades.

- b. Written Work Only: Students may question the marking of specific pieces of work, or the overall course grade. Normally, however, only written work can be reassessed.
- c. Possible Grade Changes: When a student asks for a reappraisal, an original grade may be raised, lowered, or confirmed.
- d. Reappraisal Request Form: Students wishing to request the reappraisal of a final grade should fill out the appropriate form available from the Department offering the course and submit it to the same office.
- e. Faculty Appeal Procedures: The decision of the Department may be appealed to the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies Executive Committee only on grounds of procedural irregularity or new evidence.

PETITIONS/APPEALS

Deferred Standing

Deferred standing (an extension) allows a student additional time to write a test or final examination, or to complete an assignment after the Faculty's deadline for submission of term work. In the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies, deferred standing is arranged by means of a form called a Deferred Standing Agreement (DSA). Deferred Standing Agreement Forms are available on the Registrar's Office website www.registrar.yorku.ca. A petition for deferred standing will be accepted only if the course director indicates on a DSA form that she or he refuses to approve deferred standing. Appropriate forms and guidelines are available from the Office of the Registrar, Bennett Student Services Centre.

TERM WORK, TESTS AND EXAMINATIONS

Term Work

1. Definition:

Term Work includes reports, assignments, essays, tests and other written work assigned in a course with the exception of final examinations.

2. Deadline for Submission:

Term work must be submitted by the first day of the official Examination Period of the term in which the course ends. Instructors and departments may, however, set earlier deadlines for the submission of term work.

Tests And Examinations

Tests and examinations are important parts of the educational process. They must be conducted under fair conditions which allow students to demonstrate what they have learned. Disruptions or attempts to obtain an unfair advantage are offenses against academic process and carry severe penalties. See Senate Policy on Academic Honesty and Academic Conduct found in the Undergraduate Programs Calendar.

POLICY ON ACADEMIC HONESTY

A central purpose of the University is to teach students to think independently and critically. Cheating and other forms of academic dishonesty run counter to this purpose and violate the ethical and intellectual principles of the University; they are therefore subject to severe penalties. For more information, please see the Senate Policy on Academic Honesty found in the Undergraduate Programs Calendar.

DEPARTMENTAL POLICY ESSAY & ASSIGNMENT DROP BOX

The staff of the Department of Humanities neither stamps nor receives essays/assignments of any sort. Course Directors let students know their arrangements for handing work in. There is a drop box for Humanities essays/assignments in the hall near Vanier 208. Faculty members with offices in Vanier and McLaughlin have mailboxes in this location.

DEGREE & PROGRAM REQUIREMENTS

Honours iBA Program/Honours Major/Minor iBA

Students will take at least 42 credits in Humanities, of which at least 18 credits must be at the 3000 or 4000-level.

In addition to the courses required for their major, students in the Honours iBA program must fulfill the following requirements:

- at least 18 credits in a modern languages offered by York University, including the Advanced I university-level course in the chosen language;
- at least 12 credits of internationally-oriented courses chosen outside the major;
- at least one full term abroad as a full-time student at one of York University's exchange partners.

For more detailed information regarding the Honours iBA program requirements, please consult the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies, Degree Requirements section of the Undergraduate Calendar.

Specialized Honours

Students will take at least 54 credits in Humanities of which at least 24 credits must be above the 2000-level, including 12 credits in 4000-level.

Honours BA Program

Students will take at least 42 credits in Humanities of which at least 24 credits must be above the 2000-level, including 12 credits in 4000-level.

Honours (Double Major) BA Program

The Honours BA program described above may be pursued jointly with any other Honours Bachelor's degree program in the Faculties of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies, Environmental Studies, Fine Arts, or with approved Major degree programs in Faculty of Health or Faculty of Science & Engineering.

Students must take at least 12 credits at the 4000-level in each Honours Major.

Honours (Double Major) Interdisciplinary BA Program

The Honours BA program in Humanities may also be linked in an Honours (Double Major) BA program with interdisciplinary programs. Students must take 36 credits in Humanities and 36 credits in the interdisciplinary program. Courses taken to meet Humanities requirements cannot also be used to meet the requirements of these programs. Students must take a total of at least 18 credits at the 4000-level including at least 6 credits in the program and 12 credits in Humanities. For further details of requirements, see the listings for specific interdisciplinary programs.

Honours (Major/Minor) BA Program

The Honours BA program described above may be pursued jointly with any Honours Minor Bachelor's degree program in the Faculties of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies, Environmental Studies, Fine Arts, or with approved Major degree programs in Faculty of Health or Faculty of Science & Engineering.

Honours (Minor) BA Program

The Honours Minor must be pursued jointly with an Honours BA program in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies. The Honours Minor BA program in Humanities comprises at least 30 credits including at least 12 credits at the 3000-level or 4000-level and 6 credits at the 4000-level.

BA Program

Students will take at least 30 credits in Humanities of which at least 18 credits must be at the 3000 or 4000 level.

NEW GENERAL EDUCATION REQUIREMENTS FW2014:

All LA&PS students will be required to take a minimum of 21 General Education credits from the approved list of LA&PS General Education courses.

To fulfill the Liberal Arts & Professional Studies General Education requirements students must take 21 credits of general education including:

- 6.00 credits in Natural Science (NATS)
- A 9.00 credit approved general education course in the social science or humanities categories
- And a 6.00 credit approved general education course in the opposite category to the 9.00 credit course in social science or humanities already taken.

FACULTY OF LIBERAL ARTS & PROFESSIONAL STUDIES GENERAL EDUCATION REQUIREMENTS (FW09 UNTIL FW13)

The Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies General Education curriculum provides students with the foundation of interdisciplinary knowledge, breadth, methods and the approaches necessary for successful liberal and professional education. General Education courses expose students to ways of knowing and fundamental ideas spanning the Humanities, Modes of Reasoning, Natural Science and Social Science. These courses also provide explicit instruction in critical analytical skills and thought and its communication in writing and speech.

GENERAL EDUCATION REQUIREMENT BY DEGREE TYPES

For all Honours BA, BA, Honours iBA and Honours BSW degree programs, the following is required:

- 24 credits of General Education chosen from Humanities, Modes of Reasoning, Natural Science and Social Science, including a minimum of 6 credits in each of Humanities, Natural Science and Social Science.

For all Honours BAS, BAS, Honours BHRM, BHRM degree programs, the following is required:

- 18 credits of General Education chosen from Humanities, Modes of Reasoning, Natural Science and Social Science, including a minimum of 6 credits in each of three areas: Humanities, Modes of Reasoning, Natural Science and Social Science.

Note: Modes of Reasoning is recommended for BAS and BHRM degrees.

Guidelines For General Education Courses

- It is strongly recommended that students successfully complete (pass) their first General Education course within the first 24 credits.
- It is strongly recommended that all General Education courses be successfully completed (passed) within the first 48 credits.
- A maximum of 9 credits in each of the four areas (Humanities, Modes of Reasoning, Natural Science and Social Science) will count towards fulfillment of General Education requirements.
- A maximum of 36 credits in General Education will count towards the degree. Students who are required to exceed the 36 credit maximum because of program/degree requirements must obtain permission to do so from their program of study.
- General Education courses may be used to satisfy more than one requirement, but are counted only once toward the total number of credits required for the degree as follows:

General Education courses may be used to fulfill the General Education requirement and, if applicable, major or minor program requirements. For the purpose of meeting major or minor program requirements, all 9 credit General Education courses will count as 6 credits towards the major or minor. The remaining 3 credits will count towards the total number of credits for the degree.

General Education courses used to fulfill the General Education requirement, or major or minor program requirements, may not also be used to fulfill required credits outside the major. Additional General Education courses not used to fulfill the General Education requirement, or major or minor program requirements, may be used to fulfill required credits outside the major.

1000 LEVEL COURSES

1000 LEVEL COURSES: Any remaining reserved spaces are released automatically by the online enrolment system on the first day of the term in which the course is offered.

AP/HUMA 1100 9.0A WORLDS OF ANCIENT GREECE & ROME

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

AP/HUMA 1105 9.0A MYTH AND IMAGINATION IN GREECE AND ROME

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

The mythical narratives of the ancient Greeks and the Romans constitute a continuous tradition that extends from before the reach of history to the present day. Myths survive in literary texts and visual art because their narratives have continued to prove compelling and fascinating in different languages, historical eras, and social contexts (the myths of Odysseus, Heracles, and Oedipus are just a few examples). Literature and art of all kinds have been inspired to retell and represent their stories, while the search for the meaning of mythic stories has informed and profoundly influenced a great range of intellectual disciplines including literary criticism, anthropology, and psychoanalysis. In these ways, myths have and continue to exercise a fundamental influence on western culture and, in consequence, even today they maintain a certain cosy familiarity. On the other hand, the historical contexts in which the Greeks and Romans told and retold these mythical narratives are to us in the twenty-first century culturally alien and unfamiliar.

The aim of the course is two-fold: insofar as Greek and Roman culture is fundamental to the development of western culture, students will achieve a deeper historical understanding of the latter; yet because the world of the Greeks and Romans is in many ways radically different to our own, students will develop the conceptual tools for comprehending another culture and so enhance their ability to understand and critique their own cultures. The course is also one of the Foundations courses and as such is intended to provide students with a solid grounding for undergraduate study by cultivating generally applicable and transferable skills; these include the development of clear and logical academic writing, critical and analytical skills for reading and understanding texts, constructive participation in group discussion and debate (in tutorials), and basic methods and techniques of research.

ASSIGNMENTS:

- One in-class essay
- Three take-home essays
- Fall term test
- Final exam in April examination period

AP/HUMA 1125 9.0A

CIVILIZATION OF MEDIEVAL AND RENAISSANCE EUROPE

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

The course explores two stages in European civilization -- the Middle Ages and the Renaissance -- to which our present politics, religion, intellectual and artistic culture owe much. We look for the themes, tensions, habits of thought, values and manias that link and distinguish these two eras. The Middle Ages began when Rome collapsed (ca. 500) and shaded slowly into the Renaissance (1350-1630), just after the Black Death swept through Europe. The Middle Ages were not "dark." Though turbulent and at first impoverished, they produced feudal kingdoms, gothic cathedrals, and brilliant logical philosophy. In the first term we meet medieval hermits, saints, dragons, knights, crusaders, burghers, and assorted lovers, happy and unhappy. The Renaissance saw the beginnings of modernity emerge out of the medieval past. Great individual achievements blossomed in a world reshaped by commercial expansion, political consolidation and religious crisis. It was a time of cultural flux and growth, where novelty challenged tradition, and optimism vied with deep anxiety. In the second term, we encounter poets, storytellers, philosophers, sly politicians, acute scientists, and, again, men and women of deep faith. The course has two deep lessons: the "pastness of the past" and "the textuality of text" (for writings have their rules). As a Foundations course, Humanities 1125 9.0 puts great stress on critical skills, and particularly on students' own writing.

ASSIGNMENTS:

Short papers: 50%; Mid-term: 15%; Final: 25%; Participation: 10%. (subject to change)

REPRESENTATIVE READINGS:

Beowulf; The Letters of Abelard and Heloise; Peter Abelard, History of his Calamities; The Song of Roland; Gottfried von Strassburg, Tristan; Jean de Jeanville, The Life of Saint Louis; Dante Alighieri, The Divine Comedy; Geoffrey Chaucer, The Canterbury Tales; Saint Catherine of Siena, Selected Letters; Raimundo of Capua, The Life of Catherine of Siena; Benvenuto Cellini, Autobiography; Desiderius Erasmus, Colloquies; Thomas More, Utopia; Niccolò Machiavelli, The Prince; Michel de Montaigne, Essays; William Shakespeare, The Tempest. AP/HUMA 1160 9.0A

THE ENLIGHTENMENT AND HUMAN UNDERSTANDING

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

A fundamental feature of the Enlightenment is the view that human experience is the foundation of gaining knowledge and truth. We focus on selected Enlightenment writers and thinkers in order to understand this approach to learning.

This course, which is interdisciplinary in its approach, will begin with an examination of pre-Enlightenment views of method and truth. We will then examine the scientific revolution which influenced writers and thinkers in the Enlightenment period. Once this has been completed, we will turn to the writings of selected Enlightenment thinkers. Authors to be studied include Thomas Hobbes, René Descartes, Baruch Spinoza, Blaise Pascal, John Locke, George Berkeley, and David Hume. We will examine their methodological concerns as well as how the choice of method guides their respective investigations.

ASSIGNMENTS:

4 assignments associated with the lectures and the seminars. The nature of these assignments will be discussed at our first meeting.

REPRESENTATIVE READINGS:

Required: Meditations on First Philosophy, René Descartes (Caravan Books); Dialogues Concerning Natural Religion, David Hume (Caravan Books); Leviathan, Thomas Hobbes (Library of Liberal Arts edition);

Recommended: Inventing Human Science: Eighteenth-century Domains, edited by Christopher Fox, Roy Porter, and Robert Wokler; Philosophy and Science in the Scottish Enlightenment, essays edited by Peter Jones; Scepticism in the Enlightenment, edited by Richard H. Popkin, Ezequiel de Olaso, Georgio Tonelli; Essay Concerning Human Understanding, John Locke; Three Dialogues, George Berkeley; The Enlightenment, Hugh Dunthorne; The Enlightenment: The Culture of the Eighteenth Century, Schneider, Isidor.

THE MODERN AGE: SHAPERS & DEFINERS

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

The course will introduce students to some of the important 'shapers and definers' of the Modern (Western) artistic and intellectual spirit (1750 - Present), along with the various cultural movements and counter-movements (Enlightenment, Sentimentalism, Realism, Existentialism, Modernism, Feminism) that informed or framed their work. It will do so from a particular point of view: the tension between individualism/autonomy and an increasingly bureaucratic, alienating and fragmented society. The questions that inform this course are: 1) what does it mean to be 'human' in this modern world, 2) what is human nature presently becoming, and 3) what is the potential for 'humanity' in the future? Students will be expected personally to 'engage' these questions through representative readings that include works by Diderot, Dostoyevsky, Nietzsche, Mary Shelley, Kerouac and Lyotard.

CONTEXTS OF CANADIAN CULTURE

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

How can we understand Canada? How can we approach the major themes and issues that have shaped Canadian society? This course explores a series of major themes and issues in Canadian culture through a careful examination of a number of texts. More specifically, it examines how works of fiction, autobiography, history, drama, and film represent issues of native/white relations, land settlement, immigration, work, and gender. The course is especially concerned with the interplay between the structure of material conditions and the construction of systems of meaning.

AP/HUMA 1250 6.0A
DIASPORA COMMUNITIES AND GLOBAL CULTURES

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

This course focuses on the ways that diasporic people conceive of, express, and represent their experiences in migration, settlement, and culture. Diaspora is a term that describes a group of people who identify with a particular nationality, region, religion, ethnicity, culture, or language, but have, for various reasons, migrated to different parts of the world. People in diasporas may live distantly from each other or from a place they consider to be 'home', but may still consider themselves to be part of a collective identity, community, or culture. The cultural and historical contexts with which these groups are associated can be very different, though there may be common elements to diasporic experiences. The course asks how diasporic writers and artists confront and critique ideas of 'tradition' and 'culture'. How do diaspora communities maintain connections with a 'home' place or culture? How do people in diasporas forge new identities? What challenges are experienced by diasporic people in their places of settlement? What new cultural formations emerge in diasporic artistic expressions such as literature, music, and film? To explore these questions, students will engage with a number of theoretical texts and thinkers on the concept of diaspora, as well as literary works, films, and music produced by and about diasporic people.

To provide a focus for discussion, this course will emphasize Canada as a location for diasporic engagement, while also considering the global reach of diaspora cultures. The course will feature works from Jewish, African, South Asian, Chinese, Japanese, Caribbean, and Latin American diasporas. Topics could include: forms of diasporic labour; the African diaspora and the slave trade; people in exile; race and ethnicity in diasporas; Canadian multiculturalism and diasporic diversity; hybrid identities; second and third generation diasporas; diaspora and religion; double diasporas; music and diasporic identities.

CULTURES OF RESISTANCE IN THE AMERICAS: THE AFRICAN AMERICAN EXPERIENCE

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

This course addresses the ways in which diasporic Africans have responded to and resisted their enslaved and subordinated status in the Americas. Resistance is first addressed in relationship to slavery, but later in the course resistance is seen in a much broader context: in response to post-colonial and post-civil rights, and as an engagement of national, economic, cultural and social forces. Thus, resistance might be understood as a continuing legacy of black peoples' existence in the Americas. Resistance is, first, read in relationship to European domination in the Americas and, second, to national and other post-emancipation forms of domination which force us to think of resistance in increasingly more complex ways. The "anatomy of prejudices"—sexism, homophobia, class oppression, racism—come under scrutiny as the course attempts to articulate the liberatory project.

The course focuses, then, on the cultural experiences of African diasporic peoples, examining the issues raised through a close study of black cultures in the Caribbean, the United States and Canada. It critically engages the ways in which cultural practices and traditions have survived and been transformed in the context of black subordination. It addresses the aesthetic, religious and ethical practices that enable black people to survive and build "communities of resistance" and allow them both to carve out a space in the Americas they can call home and to contribute variously to the cultures of the region.

CULTURE AND SOCIETY IN EAST ASIA

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

No single course can adequately address the richness and complexity of the cultures and societies of East Asia. However, this course will introduce students to important practices and concepts from a broadly humanistic perspective and offer a peek into what it might have been like to actually live in East Asia before widespread globalization. In order to do this, we will examine elements of the social, political, philosophical, artistic, and economic traditions that shaped both elite and popular culture in East Asia from the 1600s to the early 1800s. Our sources will include cultural artifacts (e.g., poems, paintings, clothing, etc.) from this period, writings by East Asians on their own and their neighboring societies, observations on East Asia by contemporary outsiders, and secondary sources by modern scholars who explore particularly challenging topics in depth. By analyzing both the forging of shared beliefs and the development of distinct identities in this critical period, we can better understand the ties between historical and contemporary East Asia, as well as between East Asia and the rest of the world.

Though the primary goal of the course is to teach students about a time and place quite removed from our own, the course is also designed to strengthen each student's ability to comprehend and critique his or her own culture. As a foundation for broader study at the university level, we will place significant emphasis on analytical skills, class participation, research methods, and writing. Since many aspects of East Asian culture will fall outside of the course curriculum, students will be expected to learn the critical skills of asking important and interesting questions and then figuring out how to produce informative and satisfying answers.

ASSIGNMENTS:

Document analysis (5%); 2 short essays (15% each); research essay (20%); examinations (15% each); class participation (15%). FANTASY AND TOPOGRAPHIES OF IMAGINATION

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

This interdisciplinary course utilizes a variety of materials to explore fantasy in the West, not as the opposite of reality, but as how people imagine and give meaning to their experiences, thereby both shaping and resisting what are typically believed to be the "realities" of Western cultures.

This course examines some of the dominating fantasies in the West. It explores how individuals (as well as groups) are influenced by them not simply in how they make meaning of their experiences, but also in how the dominating fantasies come to influence even what individuals might imagine. Throughout the course we will examine how individuals draw upon the dominating fantasies of the West to maintain and perpetuate cultural knowledges about the values of the culture, as well as definitions about what is human and what is "other", and what are appropriate human and non-human behaviours/relationships. We will also ask how it is possible for individuals to critique dominating fantasies by creating counter-fantasies that subvert and resist accepted knowledges and interpretations of experience and allow people to imagine things otherwise.

Some of the themes/issues that we will study include the power of words and images (with particular attention to propaganda and advertising and how we are sometimes trapped by language in the worlds that we have created); the role of fantasy in defining what is nature and natural; what First Nations people understand about North American fantasies and how works of fiction might be read as theory; the power of storytelling and learning to "read" primary and alternative worlds; the role of speculative/science fictions and utopias/dystopias in imagining how dominating fantasies might be told otherwise; political, religious and romantic quests; fantastic forms and spaces in architecture (with an exploration of how fantasy can directly structure our experience - often without our even being willing or conscious participants); the relationship of fantasy and body image/sexual identity; the "darkness of the mind" and the nature of monsters (with a focus on shifting our attention to a perspective which considers experiences from the position of that which is defined as "other" and/or "monster," and (re)imagining the boundaries between the forbidden and the allowed, desire and convention); popular fantasies and some failures of imagination; and the power of fantasy in imagining acts of subversion/resistance.

Students will learn to "read" multiple levels of texts and to "see" multiple perspectives offered through visual imagery. Together, we will be developing a collection of critical skill maps that will provide students with directions when they wish to explore a given text; that will help students to see the ways that some of the course materials relate to each other and to texts/experiences outside of the course; that will allow students to focus very narrowly on specific details/issues; and that will enable students to reflect on the paths that they have taken with respect to the course materials as well as on the paths that have yet to be taken. The selection of course materials as well as the design of lectures and course assignments have been done with special attention paid to a variety of learning preferences and styles so that students can hone the learning/critical strategies that already serve them well and be challenged to explore and develop new skills.

ASSIGNMENTS:

THE ROOTS OF WESTERN CULTURE
THE ANCIENT WORLD (CIRCA 1000 BC-400 AD)

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

This course begins by considering the look back into such ancient times when stories were reworked and transmitted for generations through oral culture, and orienting students to the emerging cultural identities of the ancient Greek and ancient Hebrews. For example we will study the documentary hypothesis which suggests that the Hebrew Bible is a composite work from several sources, and we will consider how our knowledge of "the Greeks" is often based on scant physical remains, fragmentary literary sources dependent on second and third hand authors, and is always interpretative.

Students will be introduced to many kinds of literature which emerged in the ancient period: epic poetry, lyric poetry, fables and parables, dramatic works, philosophical and medical treatises and historical prose. We will want to engage in close readings of primary texts with a view to understanding key themes and ideas, historical, political, and social contexts, and religious beliefs and practices. Thus, along the way, we might consider parallels to, and influences from, even more ancient civilizations; highlight certain Greek gods and goddess and their festivals; and, consider the social status of women, or cultural differences between the Spartans and Athenians. We will always want to engage with the texts critically which will involve examining the perspectives of ancient authors, the use of art and literature for ideological ends, as well as our own assumptions about the past.

In addition to excerpts from the Old and New Testament, we will engage with a number of Greek and Roman authors which will include many of the following: Homer, Hesiod, Alkman, Sappho, Aesop, Aeschylus, Aristophanes, Pythagoras, Plato, Herodotus, Thucydides, Hippocrates, Livy, Virgil, Epicurus, Epictetus, Apuleius and Ovid.

It was in the climate of the Roman world that the two major stands of Western thought, the Greco-Roman and Judeo-Christian, came together. After having spent some time on Archaic and Classical Greek writers, we will examine the adoption of Greek culture by the Romans who gave it their own personality. We will end the course with a look at the early Christian authors as they attempted to distinguish themselves both from the Law of the Jews and Greco-Roman polytheism.

THE ROOTS OF WESTERN CULTURE
THE ANCIENT WORLD (CIRCA 1000 BC-400 AD)

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

This course investigates the two major branches of Western thought: the Greco-Roman and the Judeo-Christian. The course begins by critically thinking about ancient times when oral stories were reworked and transmitted for generations. Students will be oriented to the ancient world by studying the emerging cultural identities of the ancient Hebrews against the background of ancient Mesopotamia. Most of the course will be engaged with the ancient Greeks from the Archaic period to the Classical and Hellenistic, and the Romans from the Republic to the early Empire. The course will end with a consideration of the emergence of proto-orthodox Christianity within the surprising mix of philosophical and religious ideas in the Roman world.

Our aim will be to examine texts both critically and in context. For example we will study the documentary hypothesis which suggests that the Hebrew Bible is a composite work from several sources, and we will consider how our knowledge of "the Greeks" is often based on scant physical remains, fragmentary literary sources which are themselves dependent on second and third hand authors.

Students will be introduced to many kinds of works that emerged in the ancient period: epic poetry, lyric poetry, fables, parables, dramatic works, philosophical and medical treatises and historical prose. We will consider influences from even more ancient civilizations; highlight certain Greek gods and goddesses and their festivals; consider the social status of women and slaves and differences between ethnic groups such as the Spartans and Athenians. We will engage with the texts interpretively which will involve examining various perspectives, the use of art and literature for ideological ends, as well as our own embedded assumptions about the past.

Our primary texts will include most of the following and many more: excerpts from the Hebrew Bible, Homer, Hesiod, Sappho, Aesop, Aeschylus, Sophocles, Aristophanes, Pythagoras, Plato, Aristotle, Herodotus, Thucydides, Hippocrates, Livy, Virgil, Lucretius, Epicurus, Epictetus, Apuleius, Marcus Aurelius, Ovid, and excerpts from the New Testament.

THE ROOTS OF WESTERN CULTURE

THE MODERN PERIOD (CIRCA 1500-1900)

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

This course explores the great ideas of Western Culture which still influence us today by examining the writings of the men and women who expressed those ideas in their books, essays, plays, novels, art and music. It examines the Scientific Revolution, the Ages of Enlightenment and Romanticism, including the anti-slavery crusade, and probes key political, social and economic ideologies such as liberalism, neo-liberalism and Marxism as well as the foundation of new scientific perspectives and freedom for women.

The modern period can be characterized by a series of revolutions, from the scientific revolution of the seventeenth century, through the 'Copernican' revolution of Kant's critical philosophy, a demand for equal rights for women, to the Bolshevik revolution in Russia in October 1917. This course traces the emergence and development of revolutions in the modern period in the scientific, philosophical, feminist, and political senses through a close reading of primary texts, in whole or in part, that represent the revolutionary impetus of the modern age. As one of the Department of Humanities General Education courses, students will develop their skills in writing essays, analyzing primary texts, and developing arguments. Students who complete all of the assigned readings will have a solid foundation of knowledge of some of the ideas that shaped the modern period.

ONE WORLD: HISTORICAL AND CULTURAL PERSPECTIVES OF GLOBALIZATION

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

Explores the social and cultural interactions of the peoples of the World from pre-history to the 21st century with the main emphasis placed on the period between 1500 and the present.

In this course we will address the main features and developments of world civilizational history from the rise of agriculture to contemporary times. The course is structured around five distinct geographical and cultural areas: the Middle East, Europe (including Russia), Africa, the Americas, and Asia (i.e., China, India and Southeast Asia). Every stage in our great voyage will be approached from multiple angles. First, each civilization is analyzed from a historical, cultural-ideological, socio-political, and religious viewpoint. Second, constant reference will be made to gender issues, in particular the status of women in society. Thirdly, our approach will occasionally be comparative in nature, addressing the most significant similarities and dissimilarities between different civilizations in a particular historical period. Always with a critical purpose in mind, we will discuss the major religious systems, social arrangements, trading patterns, political institutions, artistic expressions, and technological feats of the world throughout its tumultuous history. The overall aim is to introduce students to the complex and particular profile of every major civilization; and to offer a global, dynamic understanding of the way in which civilizations interact with and influence one another.

STORIES IN DIVERSE MEDIA

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

This course explores storytelling, expression, and communication chronologically from oral culture to cyber culture. We will thus encounter many radically different kinds of media from early cave paintings and symbols, music, ritual and theatre through to the advent of writing, mass print, film, photography, news and television, the internet, social media and computer gaming.

In this course we will investigate how different media can change the way we express ourselves, communicate and transmit knowledge. We will look at how new media may adapt old media forms to suit its purpose, or may be an entirely new emergent form that encourages new habits of being, different ways of seeing and representing ourselves, and of experiencing nature, time and space.

Students will come to understand why stories are not just entertainment but crucial to human culture and how stories are constructed, including the recurring themes and character types in traditional stories, as well as the development of new narrative techniques in modern and postmodern culture. Many visual and written works will be studied including such media forms as music, paintings, comics, short stories, as well as advertising, TV programs, news, and a number of films. Sometimes a work may be studied with a view to its construction (for example, the construction of time in comics), or with a view to its relation to other media (for example, computer gaming can be seen as a work that unifies many art forms). Often the political and social context of the works will be studied with a view to exposing ideologies of race, gender and class. The varying roles of the audience as they change through history and according to the media form will also be considered. We may relate to media, for example, as an active participant, a speaker, a reader, a passive spectator, a consumer, a user, or through a cyber body.

Students will be expected to read on average about twenty to thirty pages per week. Sometimes you may be required to both read an article and view a film (streaming available at the moodle website) for that week. There will also be at least one novel over the course of the year. The selection of reading and viewing materials will be drawn from both canonical works of the Western tradition (such as Gilgamesh and Don Quixote) as well as from popular culture (such as The Simpsons, The Matrix, and Pulp Fiction). However, the reading and viewing assignments for this course will not only be fictional (and non-fictional) stories and films, but will also include a number of important theorists such as Plato, Benjamin, McLuhan, Baudrillard and Jameson who analyze media, and culture. Students will thus have the opportunity to study not only the writers, film makers and other artists who make creative use of the new media opportunities and the shifts in cultural sensibilities, but also various authors who worry about, or celebrate, the remarkable social changes wrought by new media.

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

This course examines the relationship between law and morality in literary, filmic, and philosophical works from Ancient Greece to the Modern World and in several modern court cases.

The purpose of this course is to provide students with an introduction to the conflict between law and morality in history, literature and culture. Through reading works of literature spanning two millennia, viewing feature films and discussing court cases, students will engage with some of the key questions in the field of law and humanities such as: the nature and purpose of law; the relationship between law and other social norms; the role of literature and film in critiquing and shaping our understanding of law in society; the relationship between literary criticism and legal analysis; and the nature of justice and how might it be achieved.

ASSIGNMENTS:

The course will include in-class writing assignments, a mid-term exam, and a final exam. Students are required to attend all lectures and tutorials.

THE NATURE OF RELIGION

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

Explores the nature of religious faith, religious language (myth and symbol) and clusters of religious beliefs through an examination of the primary texts of several major world religions. Methodologies for the study of religion will also be examined.

This course is a critical study, based on classical and contemporary readings, of such issues as: the basis of religious claims, the meaning of religious discourse, the relationship between faith and reason, the nature and existence of God, the nature of religious experience, and the problems of evil and human destiny.

We will critically examine the nature and various expressions of religious questions about human life, death, suffering, and the afterlife. One of our main goals is to better appreciate religion as it exists in a modern global society. We will examine many different views and ideas in this course. What is sacred? What role do myth, ritual, and scripture play in people's lives today? Should we (I) care about the transcendent?

CHRISTIANITY IN CONTEXT

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

This is an introductory course. It offers a general overview of the Christian tradition. From its beginnings, Christianity has been inextricably intertwined with the societies and cultures surrounding it. The focus of this course is the rituals, practices, beliefs and texts of Christianity, and how they were shaped by the political, social and cultural environments with which Christianity came into contact as it spread around the globe. Particular attention is paid to the diversity of Christian beliefs and practices resulting from those interactions.

This course examines Christianity as a socio-historical phenomenon. It explores with the tools of the academic study of religion the movements, texts, beliefs and practices of this religious tradition and the factors and forces shaping them.

This Foundations course focuses on the following critical skills:

- 1) Critical reading of primary and secondary texts
- 2) Critical thinking: examining the complex intersection of factors shaping the texts, beliefs, practices and debates within Christianity, and our own assumptions about them
- 3) Writing skills: planning, organising, writing and documenting an academic essay
- 4) Presentation skills: planning, preparing and executing a presentation
- 5) Introduction to the terms and concepts related to the academic study of religion

ASSIGNMENTS: (subject to change) Two in-class tests – 20% each; Text Analysis – 10%; Essay, including proposal and annotated bibliography – 30%; Tutorial presentation – 10%; Participation – 10%.

THE JEWISH EXPERIENCE: SYMBIOSIS AND REJECTION

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

An examination of the interaction of Jews and gentiles in selected periods from antiquity through the 20th century. A case study in ethnic adaptation, the course seeks to understand how Jews sometimes adapted their lives to the world around them, and at other times withdrew into themselves, and how at certain times they exerted considerable influence on the people among whom they lived or who lived among them.

DANGEROUS VISIONS: BRAVE NEW WORLDS: THE SCIENCE FICTION CULTURE OF OUR SCIENTIFIC AGE

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

Science fiction has emerged as one of the most popular genres in our contemporary culture. Why are science fiction texts, including novels, short stories, films, and television shows, so culturally pervasive, and what does their popularity tell us about the impact of science and technology? This course will examine how science fiction, from its origins with Mary Shelley's Frankenstein to its more recent manifestations, has given cultural expressions to changing--and often ambivalent--attitudes towards modern science and technology.

The first half of the course will focus on the historical development of science fiction and the parallel developments of science and technology in their cultural context. Among the topics to be covered are responses to Enlightenment and Victorian science, representations of the scientist, scientific utopias, the mechanized society, and the reactions of science fiction authors to the brave new worlds of genetics, the Bomb, and space travel. In the second term we will concentrate on the attitudes of contemporary science fiction writers and film makers towards the cultural significance of science and technology. Themes to be discussed include feminist sf, the physics of time travel, the infinite universes of some interpretations of quantum mechanics, the threat of catastrophe (including environmental) due to technological progress, depictions of the process of scientific discovery, the complex relationship between science and religion, the ethical issues raised by the biotechnology revolution, and the disappearing boundaries between human and computer.

ASSIGNMENTS:

First Term short essay, 10%; First term long essay, 20%; Second term long essay, 20%; Group report on one of the second term themes 10%; Class Participation 15%; Final Exam 25%. (subject to change)

SCIENCE AND THE HUMANITIES

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

This course is concerned with the different and changing relationships of the sciences and the humanities. Human beings are a part of nature and are often studied as natural objects. Indeed, many would argue that science is best able to determine what constitutes human nature. Many developments in the sciences also have a direct impact on the personal and social lives of human beings, in both positive and negative ways. But science is itself a human activity practiced in specific social contexts. Natural objects are studied by human subjects whose interests and assumptions shape their view of the phenomena they examine. The particular understandings of nature put forward by particular scientists are informed by a wide range of sources, from philosophy to religion, to art, literature, and politics. This applies as much to the beginning of the twenty-first century as it does to the beginning of the sixteenth century.

The course explores themes in the study of nature and science both in the past and in the present. The interactions between the sciences and the humanities are examined in the course through topics including: How did science acquire cultural authority? How is science tied to cultural or national identity? To what extent can or should the sciences define what it means to be human? What are the changing images of the human body that science has given over time? What are the social and ethical responsibilities of scientists and who should determine such responsibilities? This course pursues such issues by examining the works of a wide range of natural and social scientists, philosophers, literary figures and artists.

CONCEPTS OF MALE & FEMALE IN THE WEST

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

This course critically examines the origins of, and the interrelationships among, concepts of "female" and "male" in "the West," with an emphasis on the intersections of gender, race, class, sexuality, age, and ability/disability. We will analyze how it is that membership in particular groupings shapes individual identity, as well as place, power, and relationships in society, and the multiple ways that these groupings both reflect and shape "Western" culture. We will explore how these concepts have been constructed, perpetuated, challenged and subverted through myth, literature, philosophy, science, history, religion, psychology, art and cultural artifacts.

Students will learn to "read" multiple levels of texts and to "see" multiple perspectives offered through visual imagery. Together, we will be developing a collection of critical skills that will provide students with directions when they wish to explore a given text; that will help students to see the ways that some of the course materials relate to each other and to texts/experiences outside of the course; that will allow students to focus very narrowly on specific details/issues; and that will enable students to reflect on the paths that they have taken with respect to the course materials as well as on the paths that have yet to be taken. The selection of course materials as well as the design of lectures and course assignments have been done with special attention paid to a variety of learning preferences and styles so that students can hone the learning/critical strategies that already serve them well and be challenged to explore and develop new skills.

INTRODUCTION TO GENDER: HISTORY, CULTURE & IDEOLOGY

Note: This course has been approved in the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies for general education credit (Humanities).

Course is on Moodle and includes lecture outlines that you can download.

This course explores gender concepts in the West as they have developed and changed in response to a range of historical developments such as individualism, religious doctrines, concepts of love, the needs of capitalism, and others. Gender is broadly understood to involve both subjective experiences and social interactions. The course examines the ways in which these interact and the consequences for individuals of deviation from socially mandated norms. We explore the ways in which gender involves the concepts of anatomical sex, sexuality, love, work, romance, marriage and family as well as the ways in which these concepts control and regulate both the individual and our social and material world. Throughout the course we explore the function of various dualisms such as male-female, mind-body, active-passive, heterosexual-homosexual and others that both function to structure gender and to create categories of oppressor and oppressed.

As a general education course we will concentrate on the study and application of a wide range of theoretical perspectives to the analysis and critique of cultural productions. The works encountered in the course are drawn from the Humanities disciplines and include scholarly works, works of literature and theology, film, music and popular culture. The theoretical frameworks we encounter include a variety of feminist and other oppositional theories, psychoanalytic theory, critical theory, semiotics, and postmodern approaches. The course will also provide an introduction to mindful meditations techniques which can be used to aid in the development of focus, concentration and stress reduction.

AP/HUMA 1970 6.0A THE WORLDS OF CHILDHOOD

NOTE: This course is the first-year, required core course in the Children's Studies Program. To enter, continue in, and graduate from the Children's Studies Program as majors or minors, students require at least a "B" grade in this course. (NOTE: AP/HUMA 1970 9.0A in Summer 2014 is NOT approved for Children's Studies majors and minors. AP/HUMA 1971 9.0 in FW2014 is NOT approved for Children's Studies majors and minors.)

This course explores the significant ways in which children, childhood and children's cultures are constructed differently in various times and cultures. We will analyze and explore the worlds of childhood through a variety of cultural forms including (but not limited to) arts, written texts, music, media, film and television. We will study the culture children create and transmit for themselves, including folklore, art, writing, activism, and responses to the world. We will focus on issues of children's rights and child power, with an eye to present and future developments in "the worlds of childhood."

COURSE GOALS:

- To cultivate a more developed sense of the multiplicities of childhood, children, and children's cultures from diverse backgrounds and histories.

- To understand the ways in which children are represented and the ways in which they represent themselves.
- To explore the vast diversity and individuality of children's cultures around the world. Through examples we will examine children's cultures (and their engagement with adult cultures), how children perceive of their own cultures, and how children are the creators and perpetrators of their own distinctive cultures.

ASSIGNMENTS:

Assignments will focus on the development of skills in critical thinking, reading, viewing, speaking, and writing. Weekly In-Lecture Quizzes – 20%; Tutorial Participation – 15%; Textual Analysis of a Representation of Childhood – 15%; Research Essay – 25%; Final Exam (during Final Exam Period) – 25%. (Subject to change).

REPRESENTATIVE READINGS:

AP/HUMA 2002 6.0A AP/CLTR 2100 6.0A QUESTIONING CULTURE

Designed to introduce students to the theoretical study of contemporary culture in past and contemporary society, offering tools for questioning and decoding the social and political contexts of cultural production. Areas of focus include popular media, consumer culture, digital culture, technology, music, subcultures, issues of gender, ideology, race, nationalism, ethnicity and identity.

As a subject area the study of culture defies easy description or encapsulation. While sometimes associated with the particular directions of the so-called Birmingham school in the United Kingdom, the practice and teaching of Cultural Studies around the world is resolutely interdisciplinary and representative of a wide range of interests, issues and concerns. In this course we will map some of the territory of Cultural Studies with the broad aim being to create a critical "toolbox" with which to critically approach the study of culture, especially within the equally broad scope of media and communications studies, technology and artistic expression.

ASSIGNMENTS:

Essay 1: 15% (5 pages); Essay 2: 15% (5 pages); Essay 3: 20% (12 pages)- this assignment includes the submission of a proposal; In class exam 1: 15%; In class exam 2: 15%; Online reading logs: 10%; Tutorial Participation and Attendance: 10%

DEFINING EUROPE: INTRODUCTION TO EUROPEAN STUDIES

From the Middle Ages to the present, Europeans have repeatedly attempted to define their continent, their culture and their heritage by establishing a contrast to “others” that supposedly do not belong. While definitions of Europe are generally based on processes of inclusion and exclusion, these processes have historically operated on a number of different levels and scales: they differentiate populations within individual countries, among countries in continental Europe, and between Europeans and peoples they encountered in other parts of the world. They have also been based on a number of criteria, such as religion, race, ethnicity, and culture. The designation of who is an outsider and why has changed significantly over time. Examples of such contrasts between insiders and outsiders include: Christians versus Muslims and Christians versus Jews; Europeans versus Africans, Asians and Native Americans; northerners versus southerners. These historical processes are reflected in contemporary debates in Europe, such as debates over immigration and citizenship or debates over Europe’s religious identities.

Focusing on such issues, this course provides an introduction to European Studies from the early Medieval period to the present, exploring the subject both thematically and chronologically and using an interdisciplinary approach. The course will draw on a diverse range of sources, incorporating literature, art and film as well as scholarly writings from such disciplines as History, Political Science and Anthropology.

INTRODUCTION TO U.S. STUDIES

Through the study and evaluation of primary texts (including essays, newspapers, books, political and legal documents, films, music, and the visual arts) students consider how individuals living in the U.S. have over the course of time perceived, articulated, celebrated, criticized or lamented their condition. The course addresses a variety of themes and controversies (the frontier, slavery and its legacies, republican government and constitutional law, regionalism, religion, immigration, popular and consumer culture, the U.S. in the world) in order better to comprehend the historical and mythic forces that have shaped and defined American life.

This course is a requirement for students in U.S. Studies and provides them with a foundation for the subsequent courses they take in this program. It introduces a broad range of disciplines including literary studies, history, political science, and the arts. It also provides a chronological overview of the development of the United States from its colonial origins to the present day. Other students, who are not majors, will similarly benefit from the coherent, but wide-ranging approach that characterizes the course.

AP/HUMA 2600 6.0A HUMANITIES FOR A GLOBAL AGE

This course provides students with important contexts for the study of the Humanities, including the place of Humanities in the curriculum of the modern university, key concepts for intellectual debate in the Humanities, and the place of Humanities-type inquiry in globalized world culture.

It is often said that we live in a global age, and without doubt that is in many ways true. But what is a global age? And what does it mean for us to live in one? The answers to these questions commonly involve economic, statistical, historical and geopolitical methods and theories. This course investigates the new global age from the perspectives of academic disciplines which together comprise "the humanities" (literary and art criticism, cultural studies, philosophy, religious studies, political theory, history), and shows how an interdisciplinary combination of Humanities subjects can help us understand what it is to live in a global age. How may diverse groups of people who nevertheless have more and more contact with each other understand themselves in ways that will encourage understanding and discourage conflict? The course also traces the history and the problematic of the humanities themselves, including their place in the university. Why and how do particular methods, theories, and institutions get created when they do? What do they illuminate/enable and what do they obscure/disable? In pursuing these issues, the course will make use of readings in philosophy, social and political theory, history, film, art, literature, criticism, and cultural studies.

ASSIGNMENTS:

AP/HUMA 2640 6.0A MODES OF FANTASY

This course explores the creative process through the study of the works and lives of a select group of artists and writers. As well as novels, plays, short stories and poems, paintings, and films, the course considers journals, autobiographies, essays and letters that show writers reflecting on their work and its relation to their own lives and to the lives of others. What does it mean to live creatively? How does an artist arrive at such a life? What are the criteria for success – for the artist and for his or her age? What role does the unconscious (collective and individual) play in the creative process? What links exist between creativity and psychological disorder, and creativity and morality? These are some of the questions the course attempts to answer. The course moves behind “finished” works of art to observe the writer’s creative impulse and sensibility in its earlier stages, and also involves a consideration of the relation between art and life as well as art and its historical moment.

ASSIGNMENTS:

Two oral seminar presentations – 40% (10% each for oral presentations, totalling 20%, and 10% each for written versions of the oral presentations, totalling 20%); attendance and participation – 20%; major research paper – 40% (proposal and bibliography: 5%; paper: 35%). (NOTE: one seminar presentation will be a book review of a title chosen from the list of secondary readings, and the second seminar presentation will be about material related to the artist or writer studied for the chosen week. Oral presentations should last no longer than 15 minutes; written presentations should be about 1,500 words, or 5-6 typewritten, double-spaced pages.) THE FOUNDERS OF CHRISTIANITY

This course explores the origins of Christianity as reflected in early Christian literature of the first and early second centuries (including the New Testament). We will consider both common denominators and diversity in the worldviews and practices of various Christian communities, looking at the transformations which took place as an obscure Judean sect from Galilee made its way into the Greco-Roman world. We will be interested in exploring how various early Christians and early Christian authors lived their lives within the broader context of Judean, Greek, and Roman culture. We begin with the earliest surviving sources, namely Paul's letters, and work our way chronologically (with some exceptions) through other early Christian documents, including the Gospels. The methods of history, the social sciences (sociology and anthropology), and literary and rhetorical analysis will further our understanding of key issues. Throughout, we will place our discussions of early Christianity within framework of the ancient Mediterranean world. Students will gain some control of both the content of early Christian texts and the environment in which Christianity was born, as well as an ability to analyze primary materials from a historical perspective.

ASSIGNMENTS:

SCENE OF THE CRIME

In The Search for Criminal Man Ysabel Rennie argues that "concepts of the criminal are protean, changing color and shape to suit the fears, interests, needs and prejudices of given societies at given times." The course will trace the production of ideas of criminality in Western thought since 1850 as they were shaped and influenced by industrial and urban development, the rise of mass and consumer culture, the politics of class, race, and gender, and changing theories of criminality. Stories concerned with crime have circulated, in oral and then in written form, throughout Western society since its inception, but it was in the nineteenth century that the genre of crime fiction began to flourish. This course examines crime narrative as a highly influential and socially embedded popular cultural form in Britain and the United States and offers students the opportunity to study representative examples of the genre in order to examine the ways in which issues of central historical, political, economic, and cultural importance have been represented in the popular domain of crime writing.

THE NEW TESTAMENT APOCRYPHA

The New Testament Apocrypha—or better: non-canonical early Christian literature—has had a great impact on western culture despite attempts by mainstream Christianity to suppress it. Stories and ideas from these texts appear in literature, art, church doctrine, and even modern fiction such as Dan Brown's The DaVinci Code. This course is designed to introduce students to a wide range of non-canonical Christian texts—from gospels, to acts of individual apostles, letters, and apocalypses. The goals will be to understand each text's place in the development of Christian thought and to observe their use in modern scholarship. Particular emphasis will be placed on the work of the so-called "new school" in New Testament Studies that claims some of these texts may predate, and therefore may have influenced, the canonical gospels.

ASSIGNMENTS: three brief text analyses (10% each), book review (20%), major paper (40%), and class participation (10%).

THE CELTIC TRADITION - THEN AND NOW

Investigates Celtic culture and art, which includes both the early medieval amalgamation of the Irish and Anglo-Saxon traditions in the British Isles, and its later manifestation during the Celtic Revival of the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Questions of style and iconography in architecture, painting, sculpture, stained glass, as well as the so-called minor arts are discussed. In the first section, subjects covered include Celtic artistic expression 400-1000, comprising manuscripts, high crosses, and metalwork. This is followed by an analysis of the Celtic Revival, 1840-1930, including the Irish Arts and Crafts Movement, and the search for an Irish identity in literature and art. Readings include historical and poetical writings from both periods. Students are encouraged to discern and appreciate the impact of the Celtic tradition in contemporary Canada.

Students will develop their skills in reading and critically evaluating texts, will consolidate their ability to undertake fruitful library and internet research, and will develop both synthetic and original styles of argument.

ASSIGNMENTS:

Women have been creating their own significant rituals both inside and outside established religious movements for centuries. Understanding the nature of women's rituals allows us to comprehend more fully women's relationship to humanity and to the numinous. This course will explore the phenomenon of women ritualizing and analyze a variety of contemporary women's rituals in light of classical and feminist ritual theory and methodologies. We will be analyzing rituals sanctioned by both monotheistic and polytheistic traditions as well as contemporary women's re-visioning and recreating of liturgy and ritual. Our approach will be interdisciplinary. We will introduce, develop, and expand upon several themes in ritual theory and women's liturgical communities.

FANTASY IN THE MODERN WORLD

An exploration of the way fantasy has shaped modern sensibility in the West since the French Revolution. We will first discuss the tradition of fantasy in the West and then examine the role of fantasy in five main areas: 1) the preamble, propaganda, and post-mortems of wars and revolutions; 2) the development of new forms of fictional discourse; 3) national movements and the modern state; 4) the development of new forms of visual discourse; 5) issues of race, class, and gender. Emphasis will be placed on the purposes and techniques of fantasy.

FANTASTIC JOURNEYS: LITERATURE & FILM

The course explores ideas and experiences of travel through fiction, non-fiction and film. Writing about journeys is as old as literature, and always features a double gaze: outwards to new landscapes, peoples and customs; and inwards as the isolation, fatigue and stimulation of leaving the familiar provoke self-discovery. In both the classics and in modern travel writing, the traveller multiplies herself or himself in the world, becoming simultaneously pilgrim, hero, and fool. In our course materials we will encounter histories of road trips and tourism, the explorer's search for objective knowledge, science fiction and time travel, and memoirs of exile and loss. The course ranges widely across geographies and historical time periods. Students will be encouraged to choose a text or film that suits their own focus of study in the final essay.

PICTURE BOOKS IN CHILDREN'S CULTURE

The genre of picture books, the only genre unique to Children's Literature, provides a complex site for theories of narratology, simultaneously invoking differing codes of meaning-making from literary, visual, and performative arts. Students will read critical sources about narratology, literary theory, and picture book theory in conjunction with a variety of picture books that expose them to the historical development of the genre. They will study a diverse representation of genres of picture books, including fiction, non-fiction, verse, wordless picture books, postmodern picture books, and other illustrated texts such as comic books, manga, and graphic novels. Course participants will explore together how pictures mean, how text means, and how pictures and words inform, animate, and unsettle each other in the art and performance of the picture book. Attention will be paid both to sites of production and reception in the readings, class discussions, and written assignments in this course on the semiotics of picture books.

REPRESENTATION OF CHILDREN'S ALTERITY

"Alterity" is the state of being "different." People in positions of power have historically enjoyed the privilege of defining themselves as "the norm" (the "Self") and others unlike them as their opposites and as less human (the "Other"). Many theoretical perspectives on alterity are based on binary oppositions: The "Self" is central; the "Other" is marginalized. The "Self" is powerful; the "Other" is disempowered. The "Self" is superior; the "Other" is inferior. The "Self" is human; the "Other" is subhuman. Of course, as Michel Foucault argues, this does not mean that the "Other" is necessarily and completely without power, for "Wherever there is power, there is resistance."

In some ways, all children and youth, because of their lack of power in relation to adults, are represented as the "Other." However, some children and youth are clearly more marginalized than others—including by other children and youth.

This course analyzes ideological implications of representations (and lack of representations) of children's and youths' alterity in a variety of texts, including picture books, graphic novels, novels, life writing, documentary and fiction films, photographs, visual art, advertising, and non-fiction. It explores representations of children's and youths' alterity in terms of gender, sexuality, race, class, physical and mental (dis)abilities, religion, nation, and the difference between being human and being animal, cyborg, vampire, or alien. The course considers vital issues raised by such representations of children's alterity and analyzes the role of stereotypes in representation by examining the production and interpretation of texts for children and adults. It also, however, attends to the potential resistance and subversions of the represented "Other" through self-representations, "writing back," recuperation, and subversive reception of texts.

CONTEMPORARY CHILDHOODS: THEORIES, POLICIES AND STEREOTYPES

This is an in-depth course that will explore contemporary theories of childhood and their implication on the lived experiences of children around the world. The first module of the course explores new and developing childhood theories within the fields of children's geographies, children and development, gender studies, digital culture and within international rights discourse. Reviewing these theories allows students to understand how children are conceptualized and how various social, political, economic and cultural contexts impact upon their unique cultures. The second module explores how theories intersect with the creation, implementation and enforcement of children's policies worldwide. National policies concerning children around the world will be analyzed including policies on child marriage, children's participation in armed service and child labour laws. The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child will be examined, particularly the mechanics of international monitoring and the impact of the UNCRC on children's lives worldwide. Building on students' previous exposure to normative discourses, understandings and constructions of childhood, the policy module will ask students to think critically about how stereotypes about children and childhoods intersect with global policy, and impact upon the lives of children worldwide.

LISTENING TO CHILDREN: ETHICS & METHODOLOGY OF CHILD CENTRED STUDIES

RESERVED SPACES: ALL SPACES RESERVED FOR CHILDREN'S STUDIES MAJORS AND MINORS

This course will explore modes and methodologies for child-centred research with a focus on ethical standards and guidelines that shape the field and sustain best practice for research with children. Students will learn and follow the ethics set forth by the Government of Canada Tri-Council Policy Statement on ethical conduct for research with humans (TCPS2). Students will be required to complete the York University Research Ethics Protocols for research with humans and will examine the review process for all research with children and youth.

Under the UN Convention of Rights of the Child (adopted 1989), young people under 18 are defined as a vulnerable population with special rights of provision, protection and participation. Therefore, realizing a child-centred approach is central to examining how children can be an integral part of the research process without being subjected to objectification and/or marginalization. This course will build concrete skills in research methodologies while providing a framework for conceiving and undertaking research with children from diverse populations. Drawing on case studies and research projects undertaken by students in the class, we will explore both creative and standard methodologies for unique research situations that recognize and support children's agency in the world of research. Not being bound by any one mode of research, this course will provide access to cultivating the necessary skills for successful research across the broad field of children's studies and beyond.

Coursework will include conceptualizing and building a research project, completing fieldwork and research tasks, research reports, ethics applications, presentations, discussions, listening, watching, reading, critical thinking and more. Most significantly, this course requires active participation by everyone in the class and a willingness to explore diverse frameworks for research design, implementation and analysis that are firmly grounded in ethical practice and standards for research with children.

Course Goals: Expand knowledge about research methodologies and ethics in the field of Children's Studies; Learn and develop skills needed for fieldwork with children in diverse settings; Develop and realize a comprehensive research project with children; Understand the complexity of ethics that underscore all research with children and complete and successfully gain ethics approval for a research project; Identify goals for applying knowledge and understanding of research with children; Develop skills to review and critique ethical and methodological issues in case studies and reports.

ASSIGNMENTS:

Research project proposal (20%); Ethics Review Package (20%); Research Report (20%); Research Presentation/Poster (20%); Class Assignments (20%).

GENDERING ISLAM: DISCOURSES ON THE MUSLIM MALE AND FEMALE

This course examines the representation and the construction of the gendered roles of "Muslim Woman" and "Muslim Man" in different Islamic societies. Interdisciplinary in approach, the course exposes the students to a variety of Muslim and non-Muslim sources, including works of historiography, jurisprudence and literature which provide a fertile ground for the analysis of the construction of the roles of Male and Female in different Muslim societies. During a critical examination of the source material, the students are asked to discuss the notion of alterity and its relevance for the development of the current myths about "Muslim woman and "Muslim man." Moreover, students become familiar with the ideas of "male epistemology" and its relevance for the interpretation of the position of the Muslim woman and Muslim men in Islamic legal discourses.

MEMORY, AUTHORITY AND THE TRANSMISSION OF KNOWLEDGE IN THE MUSLIM WORLD

This course focuses on the modes of transmission, acquisition and reproduction of knowledge in the Muslim world from the ninth century to the present. Interdisciplinary in approach, this course brings together the works of historians, anthropologists, social scientists and Islamic scholars and philosophers who have addressed the significance of writing, memorizing, commenting and transmitting Islamic scholarly texts in the process of the negotiation of authority and tradition among different classes of 'guardians' of Islamic religious knowledge. The main goal of this course is threefold: First, it provides a comprehensive overview of the history of those Islamic educational institutions which played a key role in the formation of the educated Islamic religious elite (ulama). Second, it exposes students to the institutional strategies which served to preserve and negotiate authority and knowledge in various pre-modern and modern Islamic societies. Third, it examines the complexity of the process of 'learning', which was itself grounded in several interrelated processes such as memorizing, listening, silent and loud repeating, writing, commenting, and so on.

AP/HUMA 3819 3.0M (WINTER) OUTSIDERS INSIDE RELIGION

Religion plays an important role in inculcating and perpetuating societal norms and values. However, that is only part of the story. Many members of marginalized groups have also found within religion a space within which to resist and to manoeuvre within those same norms and values. For religion is not just the site of patriarchal domination; at the same time that its symbols, rituals, practices, and beliefs serve to shape the worldview of those participating in them, those participants are also re-interpreting and re-configuring those symbols, rituals, practices and beliefs. Members of marginalized groups have always taken advantage of that dynamic, revising, transforming, and challenging the religious rituals, practices, symbols and beliefs inculcating and perpetuating patriarchal norms and values. This course examines the strategies employed by members of marginalized groups over the past several decades to resist and to manoeuvre within patriarchal stereotypes, norms and values from within their religious traditions.

The strategies explored will include those employed by feminists; racialized groups; members of lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgendered and queer communities (LGBTQ); members of post-colonial nations; and persons with disabilities.

TORAH AND TRADITION: JEWISH RELIGIOUS EXPRESSIONS FROM ANTIQUITY TO THE PRESENT

This course offers an exploration of Jewish beliefs, institutions, and bodies of literature, emphasizing continuities and changes in religious expression within and across different places, circumstances, and times. Themes covered include God, the Jewish people, Torah and its interpretation, the land of Israel; the commandments (mitzvot) and their legal (halakhic) expressions; the Sabbath; daily and calendrical cycles of holiness; rites of passage, and messianic teachings. Particular attention will be paid to the varieties of Jewish religious denominations in modern times.

The course's learning objectives are multifold. Substantively, the course aims to impart to students a sense of the major periods in the life of Jewish religious expression and illustrate how an essential matrix of elements (God, Torah, Israel) has structured, in a recognizably continuous way, the lives of Jews while also generating new and at times highly distinct visions of God, Jewish doctrine, life cycle events, and the like. Methodologically, it emphasizes study of primary sources in translation (apart from a very few primary sources originally composed in English). In so doing, the course seeks to hone student awareness of the peculiarities of genre, the frequent indeterminacy of evidence, and difficulties involved in formulating careful historical assessments.

In paying attention to the varieties of Judaism that have come to historical expression, the course raises larger questions about the religious dimension in human affairs and about what religion is and does.

THE EMERGENCE OF MODERN YIDDISH CULTURE

What is Yiddish? Where did it come from and where is going? What does its fate teach about Jewish life and culture and about minority languages in general? In this course we examine how Yiddish went from the folk language of a small, intensely religious society in medieval Central Europe to a language spoken by millions and supporting a modern, secular mass culture and national politics by World War II in Eastern Europe and beyond. In particular, it will concentrate on the Jewish "national renaissance" of the turn of the twentieth century, the clash between religious and secular cultures, and the conflict between Hebrew, Yiddish, and other languages. The final weeks will be devoted to experiments to create of a new Jewish culture and identity in Poland, the Soviet Union, and North America between the two World Wars and, finally, to the situation of Yiddish in the post-Holocaust world.

THE FINAL SOLUTION: PERSPECTIVES ON THE HOLOCAUST

The attempt of the Nazis to annihilate world Jewry was in many ways unprecedented in human annals. It was a turning-point in history, the way for which was prepared by revolutionary political, social, technological, and philosophical developments. In other ways, however, it was a not unpredictable outgrowth of the past. Although analysis may be difficult and painful, especially for survivors, the Holocaust must be analyzed and understood if those who live on are to learn from it. Such analysis involves the examination of different aspects of life, using the tools of the historian, the theologian, the literary critic, and, to a lesser extent, the social scientist.

The course is divided into several sections, each of which approaches a different aspect of the Holocaust: the historical and philosophical background, the psychological and historical reality, the religious questions that arise in its aftermath.

ASSIGNMENTS:

WOMEN AND THE HOLOCAUST

Through the work of a small group of scholars across disciplines, there has been a growing acknowledgment of the importance of gender as a category of analysis in deepening our understanding of the past and its relevance to the present. Although both men and women were victimized by the Nazi genocide, writing by men and women victims and survivors indicates significant differences in their experiences of atrocity in ghettos, in hiding, and in concentration camps, as well as different ways of remembering and coping with the past and its after-effects. Gender analysis enables us to discuss both the similarities and differences in the experiences and responses of men and women to the Nazi genocide, and in the ways they respond to the aftermath of extreme trauma.

In addition, scholars have observed that when we study the Holocaust, we inevitably extract from it contemporary meanings. Analyzing the images of men and women in the Holocaust in retrospective descriptions – the narratives of historical and literary accounts, as well as art, film, and popular culture – helps us better to understand the interpretations and ideological uses to which history and memory are put. In contemporary modes of representing the Holocaust, men and women are featured in particular ways that are frequently at odds with experience and historical reality and, moreover, sometimes suppress real memory, such as recollections of sexual violation, or disruptions of parent-child bonds under Nazi atrocity. Bringing gender analysis to bear on the Nazi genocide – by examining both traces of the past (such as survivor narratives) and the role of that past in the contemporary imagination – expands the compass of Holocaust studies, and also has bearing on contemporary genocidal actions and gender-related war crimes.

CONSUMER & POPULAR CULTURE

This course examines the practice of individual and collective expression within contemporary consumer and popular cultures with the broad aim of highlighting the potential for creative, expressive and political agency. While acknowledging the hegemonic forces behind mainstream consumer society, the course will focus on the possibilities that exist within the parameters of normative consumer life for engaging in creative/critical work that while not necessarily counter-hegemonic, is at least not in total lock step either. In this sense, the course departs from the Frankfurt School inspired stream of cultural studies that posits mass (or popular)/consumer culture as a great evil that demands unwavering conformity and strips its citizens of the ability to make informed, critical choices and lifestyle decisions. Rather, popular/consumer society is presented here as a non-deterministic force or context around which "real" creativity and cultural engagement can be envisioned and enacted.

In addition to presenting important theoretical/methodological concepts and tools for the study of popular and consumer cultures across a variety of disciplines, the course is structured around a selection of contemporary phenomena or cultural practices, which will vary from year to year. Among those that could be chosen are the following: Urban subcultures, Popular music and resistance, Music cultures and subcultures, The Pleasures of shopping, Social change as driven by consumption patterns and behaviours, Food culture, Design Culture, Lifestyle as expressions of self and identity, Brands, identity and power, Fanzines, Cult movies, The Web: places of self and community, Gadgets: expression, empowerment and conformity, Style and Substance, Wine Culture, Trends, it-girls/boys and other hot spots, Celebrity culture, Reality TV and fame, Public/Private Space - invasions and opportunities, On the Fringe - outcasts, freaks and UFOs

With such topics, the aim is to provide students with the opportunity to make direct connections between theoretical concepts and the everyday life experiences of contemporary consumer/popular culture.

ASSIGNMENTS:

Weekly Blogs and short tasks: 20%; Exploratory Essay (4 pages): 20%; Final Research Paper (10 - 12 pages): 30%; Small group analysis (on line presentation and in class follow up and discussion): 20%; Online reading quizzes: 10%

AP HUMA 4107 6.0A THE ANCIENT GREEK AND ROMAN NOVEL

This course explores literary and cultural contexts of the ancient Greek novel or “romance” and related literature in the Roman imperial period (first to third centuries CE). These fictional (or partially fictional) narratives often centre on the story of separated lovers and their adventures, and we will give special attention to the generic features and plots of works including Chaereas and Callirhoe, An Ephesian Tale, Leucippe and Clitophon, and An Ethiopian Story. We will also investigate the ways in which Latin-speaking authors developed and, at times, parodied the Greek novel, considering Roman novels such as The Golden Ass by Apuleius and the Satyricon by Petronius. Finally, we will also consider how certain cultural minorities, including Jews and Christians, produced literature that intersects in significant ways with the novel, including Jewish works such as Joseph and Aseneth and Christian works such as The Acts of Paul and Thecla. Throughout the course, we will go beyond the literary features of these texts, using these writings as a window into the social, political, religious, and cultural worlds of the authors or audiences of these works.

AP/HUMA 4140 6.0 CHILDHOOD IN CANADIAN CULTURE

This course analyzes childhood as represented and experienced in Canadian culture through time, across regions, and among cultural groups. There are two primary aspects to the course: first, an exploration of the range of representations of children and childhood in Canadian expressive culture through different moments of history, throughout different regions, and among different cultural groups; and second, the relationship of these cultural constructs to the real-life experience of children at various times in different parts of, or groups within, Canada. The course will also focus on children's own culture (through their folklore, reminiscences of being a child, and similar documents of the voice of the child); on "child power" and its limitations; and on contemporary concerns about the role and status of children in Canada. The course utilizes several genres of "texts" (including fiction, poetry, life-writing, drama, and film) and multidisciplinary approaches (including the studies of literature, film, history, and ethnography).

REPRESENTATIVE READINGS:

A history or sociology of Canadian children and youth (such as Histories of Canadian Children and Youth); a course kit consisting of several primary and secondary texts; Canadian poetry for adults and children and by children; memoirs of childhood (such as My Name is Masak); documentary films (such as Angry Angels: Violent Young Girls, Childhood Lost: The Residential School Experience); plays for young audiences (such as The Shape of a Girl, Life Science, 2B WUT UR, The Boy in the Treehouse, Cost of Living); adult novels and films about childhood and youth (such as Mon Oncle Antoine, New Canadian Kid, Lives of Girls and Women, The Boys of St. Vincent, New Waterford Girl); and children's and young adult novels (such as Underground to Canada, Two Little Savages, Emily of New Moon, One Proud Summer, Hold Fast, In Search of April Raintree, Boy O'Boy, Harriet's Daughter, Breakaway). AP/HUMA 4142 6.0
CONTEMPORARY CHILDREN'S CULTURE

PRE-REQUISITE/CO-REQUISITE: AP/HUMA 3695 6.0: LISTENING TO CHILDREN

This course proceeds from an understanding of children as agents in and of culture. It argues that children are not mere receivers of culture, but active producers of it as well. Like all distinguishable human groups, children have cultural artifacts with which they identify collectively and by which they are identified by outsiders. These artifacts may be material, oral, behavioural and, increasingly, virtual or digital. Young people manipulate these artifacts in response to a multiplicity of physical and social milieux to fulfill various needs and achieve desired ends. These artifacts comprise childhood culture as well as children's own culture.

Childhood culture is that which supports and reflects the social construction(s) or child and childhood amongst a given people at a particular time and place. Its persistence tends to rely predominantly upon adults and the media and institutions they control. Examples include rhymes and games adults play with infants, manufactured toys, children's literature, and traditional singing games taught in preschools and kindergartens.

Children's own culture is that which resonates with young people's sense of "childness" or state of being a child, again in particular sociocultural and historical-geographical contexts. Children inherit some of their own culture through oral tradition, as well as through observation and imitation of their older peers; some they appropriate from the world around and re-create or manipulate to their liking; while some they create themselves and share within whatever child-centered milieux and avenues are available to them.

Taken together, childhood culture and children's own culture support childhood as a microcosm of the larger culture in which it exists. As such, children's culture at any given time or place serves as a worthy topic for serious study as a means to appreciate the nature, meanings and functions of children's "ways of being" and their "shared set of ideas," these being two of the most humanistic definitions of culture. Further, children's culture (by virtue of being typically more subversive and more creative than its "parent" culture) offers a particularly significant perspective on that larger culture and its potential trajectory into the future.

The course will address the nature, significance and relevance of children's culture today by exploring the qualities of children's own culture has typically exhibited whenever it has been documented worldwide. This is not to essentialize children or their culture – the content definitely varies, but the characteristics persist. The culture that children themselves have considered strong enough to be remembered and passed on for their own use is oral, interpersonal and interactive; shows an omnipresence of play; is active as well as secretive, displaying strong boundary maintenance; is superstitious, imaginative and primarily creative; values tradition and honours fairness and justice (especially retributive justice); displays imagination and creativity; has short generations; is subversive and serves as children's locus of control and a primary means for their development empowerment We will consider contemporary children's culture in terms of these attributes that children themselves have value and that evidently have served them well. By so doing, we will analyze the ways and means by which contemporary culture of and for children does or does not work in their best interests. Further, we will explore contemporary social constructions of child and childhood and the agenda of child concern association with them as well as the childness of contemporary childhoods and its potential enduring impact on people's lives.

FANTASY AND CHILDREN'S CULTURE

This course explores the fantasy mode in childhood and children's culture made by and for them, including literature (poetry, picture books, and novels), film (live action and animated), toys, songs, and games (including video games).

The course examines the concept of fantasy, investigating the role fantasy plays in the lives of children through the study of various genres of fantasy, including heroic and epic fantasy, talking animal fantasy, and time-travel fantasy. The roots of fantasy in Victorian and Edwardian fantasy, in Britain, the United States, and Europe, will be explored, as will the evolution of literature, film, and game fantasy from throughout the 20th century, including contemporary manifestations of fantasy in children's and young people's culture.

STORYTELLING, MULTICENTERED WORLDS, AND RESISTANCE

The world around us is changing rapidly and there are many who suggest that the values, perspectives and behaviours of human beings need also to change in order to meet the challenges posed by this new world. In the face of increasing globalization, some are calling for a rethinking of Western values that focuses more on who we are and how we live with respect to the places in which we live: our locals. This is an interdisciplinary course that examines what some of these changes in values and perspectives might be by drawing upon a wide range of theories and studying a diversity of texts, artifacts and cultural practices to interrogate the ways that humans make meaning of their lives, their values and their communities through stories and storytelling. We will explore the notion that stories emerge from a context of situated embodied knowledges that are grounded in a "local" and that comprise our multicultural and multicentered worlds, and focus on those that challenge some of the current and dominating stories of Western cultures.

The course will use a concept of "the local" that is derived especially from Native and Environmental philosophies, and from the idea of multicentered societies of feminist artist Lucy Lippard in which "the local" is a concept of place which is spatial as well as temporal, personal as well as political, and which encompasses all of the senses and is intimately connected with the histories, memories, and the relationships of all beings that reside there. We will consult a multiplicity of materials and disciplines such as oral traditions, literature, music, performance, art, film, architecture, ceremony/ritual, comics and graphic novels, news media, documentaries, historical documents, myth, folklore, popular culture, feminist studies, cultural studies; religious studies, anthropology, archaeology, and geography, to consider notions of place, notions of relationships, respect, and responsibility among human and other-than-human beings in the stories that we encounter, and to examine how individuals and groups whose stories and "locals" are different might, at particular moments, identify common concerns in their stories and work together over those common concerns to strengthen their communities and/or to make change.

ASSIGNMENTS:

MODERN MOODS: NOSTALGIA AND MELANCHOLY

Nostalgia is often described as a type of melancholy. In fact, both were associated at different points in history with pathology, withdrawal from the here and now, and the cultivation of aesthetic and moral sensibility. This course will explore to what extent nostalgia and melancholy have been linked, intertwined, and confused in contemporary literature, as well as to what extent a categorical distinction between them is justifiable today.

To provide a basis for our investigations, we will survey the culturally diverse history of the discourse about melancholy (and, by extension, spleen, melancholia, and depression, its medical sisters) and juxtapose it with the discursive trajectory of nostalgia: its scientific problematization in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries as a nosological category (severe homesickness rendering soldiers unfit for service, which would be given different political significance and uses up well into the twentieth century); its sociocultural treatment in European thought of the late eighteenth and nineteenth centuries (influenced by Romanticism and industrial capitalism); its role in totalitarian ideologies of the early twentieth century; its subsequent emergence as a politicized cultural phenomenon in the 1970s; and its more recent, largely depoliticized, commercial use ("retro marketing"), with some notable exceptions (nostalgia for imperialism, communism, and fascism, or their elements). The immediate goal of this course is to reflect on, and try to define, the changing value of nostalgia in modern culture. We will also contextualize our discussion within the recent "affective turn" in cultural theory and history.

LITERATURE OF TRANSGRESSION: FROM MARQUIS DE SADE TO TAMARA FAITH BERGER

What does it mean to label a literary work transgressive? What merits, or has merited, the name in the past? Is it an umbrella term to describe works that shock with the psychosexual lives of their characters, that are intentionally controversial, sensationalistic, immoral, obscene, offensive to religious sensibilities; works deemed dangerous that are censored or banned; works that belong to the counterculture and literary avant-garde? Has the basis for classing a work as transgressive changed over time? What are the main functions of literary acts of transgression? What, if any, power do they exert over the societies that produce them and those that later discover them? When does transgression age well, and when badly (becoming cliché)? How do the (aesthetic, moral, legal, political) aims of the author enter into a work's status as transgression? Is transgression a category of literary form, as well as of content? Is it inevitably a message of some sort, reopening questions presumed settled, or is the "message" wholly contained in the act of crossing boundaries, of willful iconoclasm, of giving free reign to desire, of violating taboos, and breaking the law? Why is transgressiveness increasingly a term of merit rather than of censure? Why has academe decided to give transgressive works the time of day? (Can transgression, as we are studying it here, even be a disciplinary object? Discipline, after all, presupposes a system of rules, their enforcement, and submission to them...). What can we expect from this pedagogy of transgression; does not its domestication render transgression powerless or meaningless? Then again, can we not, in this context, speak of a positive relationship between transgression and critique, just as we speak of a link between it and innovation beyond the mainstream? Is the common sense of transgression not therefore overly narrow, locked in the antinomy of perversion and repression as an affected and glorified alternative to the pursuit for cheap thrills?

The purpose of this seminar is to examine these and related issues in a disciplined fashion, with reference to a number of modern European classics. Authors studied include: D.A.F. de Sade (Philosophy in the Bedroom, orig. Philosophie dans le Boudoir, 1795), J.W. von Goethe (Faust I, 1808) F. Dostoevsky (Crime and Punishment, 1866), Ct. de Lautréamont (Les Chants de Maldoror, 1869), L. Sacher-Masoch (Venus in Furs, 1870), J.-K. Huysmans (Against Nature, orig. A Rebours, 1884), R. Roussel (Impressions of Africa, 1910), G. Bataille (Story of the Eye, orig. Histoire de l'oeil, 1928), E. Jelinek (The Piano Teacher, orig. Klavierspielerin, 1983), J. Littell (The Kindly Ones, orig. Les Bienveillantes, 2006), and Tamara Faith Berger (Maidenhead, 2012). We will also read theoretical and critical discussions on the subject of transgressive art and its relative value.

READING BILDUNG: THE GERMAN-LANGUAGE HUMANITIES TRADITION

This course examines key writers in the German tradition of the history of ideas with an innovative Humanities-oriented pedagogy based on the comparative study of original texts and their English translations. Students will be introduced to the socio-historical context in which key concepts such as Bildung, Aufklärung, Öffentlichkeit, Kapital, and Seelenkunde took on specifically modern meanings, and will then follow the vicissitudes of their translation into English. They will be encouraged to draw on their experience of learning foreign languages, the process of which many will have had, and compare that with reading and interpreting texts.

By the end of the course, students will have not only a solid understanding of key concepts in the tradition of humanistic thought but also enough familiarity with how they are expressed in German to be able to understand short passages in the original with the strategic use of a dictionary. Students will be able to compare original texts with their translations into English, and to use original language in quotations and textual analysis correctly. They will understand the transformative aspects that the translation of key ideas has had, and will have a sounder understanding of the German-language tradition in the Humanities.

This course is open to students in all disciplines who are interested in the modern German tradition of the history of ideas.

ARTS & IDEAS

HUMA 4730 6.0 explores the synthesis of the arts. This is the ordering of aesthetic and critical perceptions in terms of the interrelationship of the arts and the social and aesthetic ideas that inform them. What transformations occur when one cultural reproduction influences other mediums? The course examines the arts and ideas of the "frontier", physical, metaphysical and symbolic, the crossing of borders of the mind, imagination and the arts. The course looks at the ways in which frontiers are embodied and transformed in painting, music, architecture, literature, and film mediums (specifically American Vietnam war films), and other arts. Throughout the year, HUM 4730 investigates the unifying and fracturing concepts of frontiers in all of their diversity. The first term analyses American Vietnam war films and the second term applies the idea of frontiers to architecture, the religious in painting, speculative fiction, and the series Star Trek: The Next Generation.

ASSIGNMENTS:

First Essay: 20%; Final Essay: 25%; In Class Test: 15%; First annotated research bibliography: 10%; Second annotated research bibliography: 15%; Class Participation: 15%.

GENDER & SEXUALITY IN JEWISH LIFE

This course offers an exploration of distinctive Jewish approaches to questions of gender, sexuality, and the body, as formulated in their historical, religious, ethical and social dimensions. While we begin our journey with Biblical and other traditional sources, we focus most of our attention on contemporary encounters between gender/sexuality and Jewish life and the gendered nature of religious practice and religious authority. The course explores normative constructions of women's and men's societal and sexual roles in law and custom, and compares these to social realities.

Our analysis is situated within wider theoretical frameworks which include discussions of feminism, queer theory and social constructionism. The objective of the course is to use the theoretical categories of gender and sexuality as analytical tools to help us enrich our understanding of Judaism and Jewish life.

Particular topics include:

- explorations around the inclusion/exclusion of women in Jewish religious life, both historically and in the contemporary period.
- Social and religious constructions of masculinity and femininity in a Jewish context
- the relationship of gay/lesbian identities to Judaism and Jewish life; we document the variety of Jewish approaches to gay and lesbian realities and the changing nature of these encounters (this includes LGBT participation in synagogue ritual, Jewish marriage and Jewish communal life)
- exploring the understudied area of transgender identities in Jewish life; we examine traditional Jewish sources which address this phenomenon and examine how transgender issues are playing out in contemporary Jewish life.

SOUTH ASIAN RELIGIONS AND POPULAR CULTURE

The objective of this course is to inquire into how South Asian religions are represented, practiced, communicated, and transformed through popular culture. How are religious themes, images, and ideas explored in contemporary film, television, print media and music? What roles do language, gender, caste, literacy, and poverty play in the reading of cultural texts, and in the practice of religion? What can 'popular culture' mean in a subcontinent with more than 1.5 billion people, with hundreds of languages and multifarious religious traditions? How are ideas about religion transmitted and disseminated through the South Asian diaspora and around the world?

We will begin by considering historical contexts for 'popular' culture, studying some significant early and medieval art forms and their engagement with Hinduism, Buddhism, Islam, and Sikhism. With this grounding, we will then move on to consider contemporary popular cultural forms like visual art, film, television, photography, and comics in their historical, regional and social contexts. Throughout the course, we will consider religion and popular culture in relation to colonialism, nationalism and communalist conflict. The course travels through India, Pakistan, Bangladesh and Sri Lanka, allowing us to explore several religious and cultural locations. In the latter part of the course, we will also consider South Asian religions in the diaspora and the role of globalization. Taking an interdisciplinary approach to the History of Religions, the course draws on theory and research in cultural studies, art history and film studies.

CHURCH, MOSQUE AND SYNAGOGUE: JEWS, MUSLIMS AND CHRISTIANS IN MEDIÉVAL SPAIN

The Muslim conquest of the Iberian peninsula in 711 inaugurated a complex trireligious society that was to endure nearly eight hundred years (and more than eight centuries on the Muslim lunar calendar). This development has given rise to Spain's designation as a "land of three religions" and Spain's reputation as premodern western Europe's foremost "pluralist" society. It has also made Spain, as compared with other European lands, a hard country for non-Spaniards to understand.

This course seeks to explore diverse facets of Jewish-Muslim-Christian convivencia ("dwelling together"; coexistence), a topic that continues to be the object of attention for a range of scholars -- and many beyond the academy who have found it pertinent to an understanding of our own age. The course focusses on religious, intellectual, and cultural contacts and their socio-psychological dynamics, placing these in various historical and at times (very partial) geographic, linguistic, political, economic, and technological contexts. The course centers on written sources but does not wholly neglect iconography, music, and architecture. It stresses diverse perspectives within and across religious boundaries and at times forces us to ponder difficulties faced by scholars seeking to explain religious or religiously-linked phenomena (e.g., what actual human experience lies behind the metaphor of "religious conversion"?). Methodologically, our enterprise emphasizes study of primary sources as the only way to arrive at a trustworthy model of convivencia. In the course of such study, attention is paid to peculiarities of genre, the frequent indeterminacy of evidence, and difficulties involved in formulating historical assessments.

MAIMONIDES

If there were not incontrovertible evidence that there was only one man named Rabbi Moses ben Maimon (Maimonides or Rambam; 1138-1204), it would be tempting to think that there were two, or even more. Some of his works display an unrivalled mastery of rabbinic literature; others an amazing mastery of a totally unrelated field: Greek and Muslim philosophy.

Maimonides was also an accomplished physician and a prolific writer on medical issues. And he was not a scholarly recluse, but rather an involved leader of the Jewish community of Egypt.

He also provided compassionate advice to other Jewish communities far from his home.

Maimonides was almost certainly the Jewish philosopher who had the greatest influence on the world of Christian, Muslim and Jewish philosophy.

In this course we will study selections from all of Maimonides' major works, but particularly from his code of Jewish law (Mishneh Torah) and his major philosophical work The Guide for the Perplexed. We will also study a number of the common scholarly theories about Maimonides, paying particular attention to the question of whether the esoteric reading of Maimonides (i.e. the reading that claims that Maimonides actually had a very radical agenda which he only hinted at in his works) is legitimate.

All readings in the course will be in English.

THE ARABIAN NIGHTS: MORALITY, SEXUALITY AND STRATEGIES OF INTERPRETATION

This course examines the history of the reception and interpretation of The Arabian Nights from its first appearance in Galland's 1701 translation, to its latest edition by Malcolm Lyons in 2010. Interdisciplinary in approach, this course exposes students to a variety of textual interventions – omissions, inventions, alterations, interpretations, – which European and non-European editors and translators committed as they engaged in different editions of this text. In the course of analysis of the significance of these 'transactions' – the students focus on the tales which deal with Islamic morality and sexuality in an imaginary society of 'the Orient.' As the students perform close readings of differing editions of these tales, they examine continuities and discontinuities in the interpretations of the tropes of 'Oriental' morality and sexuality in European and non-European renditions of The Arabian Nights.

TRANSFORMATION OF JEWISH THOUGHT AND CULTURE

The Middle Ages and early modern period saw important and influential intellectual and cultural innovations in a number of spheres. This course explores Jewish thought in its various forms, in light of larger cultural developments, over close to a millennium (800-1800), focusing on transformations of the classical (biblical-rabbinic) legacy and interplay with the Islamic and Christian religio-cultural spheres in which they developed.

Topics and genres covered will a number of the following (varying from year to year): scriptural interpretation, philosophy, poetry, inter-religious polemic, mysticism (with a special focus in 2012 on writings of the great theologian and legal codifier, Moses Maimonides).

An overarching theme of the course is Jewish intellectual and literary encounters – adaptive, symbiotic, conflictual, and so forth -- with other cultures; i.e., with the larger Islamic and Christian milieus in which medieval and early modern Jewish scholars thought and wrote. In the case of, we will have to explore the emergence of Judeo-Arabic thought and culture within the larger intellectual and literary “Islamicate civilization” that helped to stimulate and shape it. The course concludes with a quick glance forward at Jewish thought and culture in light of the theological and scientific revolutions of the seventeenth century and transition to modern times.

IMAGINING ANNE FRANK: THE GIRL, THE DIARY, THE AFTERLIVES

Almost seventy-five years ago, in June of 1942, Anne Frank penned her first entry into the red checkered diary that she had just received for her thirteenth birthday. By many estimates,

Anne Frank's The Diary of a Young Girl, first published in 1947 and in English translation in 1952, and by now translated into over 70 languages, is the most widely read narrative to emerge from the Holocaust. Frank's Diary has engendered musical compositions, works of fine art, biography, fiction, poetry, dance and film. The web of meanings associated with it extends well beyond its historical context and the chronology of a young girl's life cut tragically short. Since its publication, the diary has drawn debate, attracting the attention of strong partisans who saw in it different messages and interpretations. The popularity of the diary has pulled Frank into public consciousness, making of her an icon, a figure bearing the meanings brought to the diary by her readers in their own cultural moments and contexts.

Focusing on the composition, history and reception of the diary and its adaptation to stage and screen, as well as the myriad literary responses which re-imagine Frank as a character, symbol, or referent, the course will explore issues of lifewriting, personal and collective memory, and interpretation of the past. Tracing the "afterlives" of Frank will provide a case study for addressing the broader question of how and why certain cultural works inspire attachment, fantasy, reinterpretation and rethinking.

ARCHITECTURE AND SOCIAL CHANGE

Modern architecture and design has often been based on identifiable visions and dreams of a future utopia made possible through good design and careful planning. Indeed, many architects and designers depict themselves as visionaries capable of positively altering the social and cultural structures that dictate the course of everyday life. This course will probe the relationship between such visions and their intended or unintended results in terms of improving or seriously damaging the cultural fabrics of cities, towns, communities and individuals. The central focus will be on architects, designers, movements, projects and critics of the 20th and 21st centuries, such as the Bauhaus School, the Archigram Group, the International Style, Jane Jacobs, Leon Krier, Rem Koolhaas, Daniel Libeskind, and Zaha Hadid.

The course will be structured as a seminar, with a selection of case studies and readings serving as the platform for discussion and debate. Among the central issue to be probed, are the political and ethical questions raised by deliberate attempts to "remodel" societies through architectural/design models and practices. Can better design make the world into a better place? While there are many examples of failures that could be used to negate such optimism, there are also many instances where architectural/design visions have indeed made significant and positive alterations to social and cultural life. Given contemporary concerns over the environment, the role of architecture and design is particularly important in that it provides one context through which social and cultural structures (and the habits and behaviours associated with those structures) could potentially be reconfigured to decrease humanity's negative impact on the environment.

ASSIGNMENTS:

Seminar/Discussion presentation and participation: 25% students will be responsible for leading some online discussions group/seminars on a specific reading and/or case study as outlined in a separate instruction sheet. The overall grade for this assignment is based on the actual presentation and the participation in the online discussion.

Research Proposal and Annotated Bibliography: 20% the proposal should provide a detailed thesis statement and outline (3-4 pages for the proposal itself NOT including the bibliography). The bibliography should have at least 10 academic sources, with each source being described with a short paragraph.

Weekly reading logs/blogs: 25% each student will be required to keep a reading log. This log should review the main ideas of each of the assigned readings and, as well, make references, where appropriate, to outside examples. Basically, this means that if there are some ideas or concepts in the readings that you think could be illustrated by an something that you have encountered, please make a reference to it or include an image, commentary, etc.. However, the main objective of the reading log is to demonstrate that you have read the assigned readings carefully. Please see additional handout for more details.

Final Paper/project: 30% A formal research paper, as described in a separate handout is required.

LITERARY, MUSICAL, AND VISUAL CULTURES: MODERNISM ACROSS THE ARTS

The underlying project of the course is the analysis of how we make meaning through art forms. More specifically, we will investigate the literary, music, and visual cultures of the late-nineteenth and early-twentieth centuries to examine what we could call, with hindsight, a burgeoning interdisciplinary and interartistic inclination. The course contextualizes how and why this interdisciplinary impetus occurs during the period, as well as how such crossovers between artistic forms contribute to the generation of new modes of cultural material. Issues to be explored include: questions about visual culture, such as the nature of images and the crucial role that "looking" plays in societies; how the aural provides alternatives to, interacts with, and/or destabilizes the visual; and, how media that combine the visual and aural achieve their efficacy. These concerns will be problematized by overarching questions about gender, race, ethnicity, sexuality, nation, and class.
